

Sensory Differences

A guide for parents of children and young people with Autism

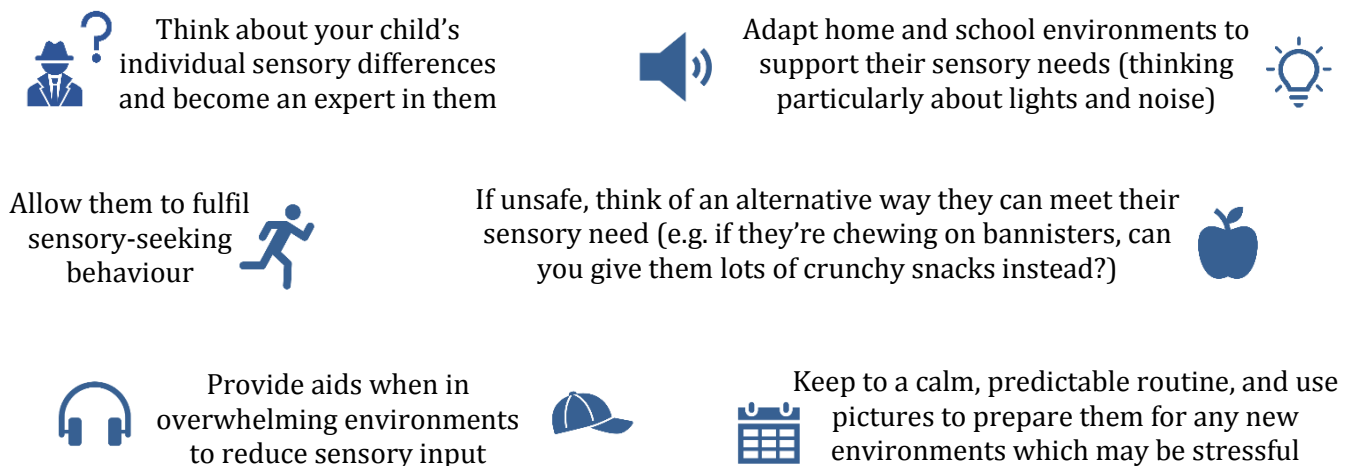

The brain processes a huge amount of sensory information received from the body. This includes:

Children with Autism can be under or over sensitive to any of these senses. You might notice them:

To help support these sensory differences, you can:

For more information:

National Autistic Society:
www.autism.org

Devon Sensory Processing Toolkit:
www.childrenandfamilyhealthdevon.nhs.uk/occupational-therapy/using-your-senses-support/