

All About My Sibling

Siblings of children with a learning disability often have a different experience to their peers. School and friends might not understand what they experience. These activities can help siblings to start sharing with important people in their lives about their brother or sister with a learning disability.

Things to Tell my Teacher

Sit with your child and think together about how being a sibling to their brother or sister affects them at school. Perhaps they're a bit more tired when their sibling has struggled to go to sleep, or they're late to school because the taxi for their sibling was late and they needed to wait too. Support them to think about what they need from their teacher.

Help them to write a letter or draw a poster to share this with their teacher.

All about my sibling

Encourage your child to make a poster about their sibling and the things they would want other people to know about them. Use the template if they need a bit of extra structure.
